Keeping the Dreams Alive

Our first-year students soon face their first semester exams. You may recall the exam jitters, perhaps even the nightmares about forgetting everything that you knew as you opened the exam. What makes it all worth it, of course, is the dream that each new law student holds.

To keep these dreams alive, and even to raise their aspirations, we have begun sharing your successes with our students. Together, the more than 9,000 of you have made signal contributions throughout the nation and, increasingly, the world. Collectively you are federal and state judges, including the chief judge of the district or state; members of the U.S. Senate and House and state legislators; managing partners of the nation's best-respected law firms; heads of international outreach programs; successful business persons; leaders in the legal services sector; nationally respected journalists; general counsel to major businesses. You have embraced a lawyer's ability to use volunteer energies effectively and are community leaders and philanthropists.

This fall, we implemented a program that puts students more directly in contact with outstanding alumni and other members of the central Ohio legal profession. This is a sustainable mentoring program because Mentoring and More @ Moritz asks merely that mentors and students attend three lunch programs together each year. The lunch programs, modeled on Inns of Court programs, include a provocative speech on a legal topic followed by discussions, often led by faculty members at the tables.

You have made the Mentoring and More program possible, as you have over the years with many of the programs that add excellence to the college. The new facility across from Drinko Hall, the Barrister Club, was built entirely through your contributions. Alumni have responded to invitations to mentor. The Ohio State Bar Foundation has funded an exciting speaker series for the year. We hope to attract many of you to meet informally with students at the pre-football game tailgates at the Barrister Club, where all alumni and students are invited.

Because alumni support Moritz Law, another new initiative has been possible this year. Our Distinguished Practitioner in Residence Program has created a series of one-credit courses in business law on such topics as cross-border mergers and acquisitions, ethical obligations of corporate counsel, and corporate board responsibilities for executive compensation.

The progress is also compelling in terms of numerical measures. The 2005 entering class had the highest LSAT scores in the college's history. The median LSAT this year was 161, which represents a climb of 13 percentage points over the median in 2000, for example. The spread between the 2004 Ohio State scores on the Ohio bar exam (91 percent passing) and those of overall test takers was the greatest in recent history (and perhaps ever, if we researched the rates).

Our fifth former Blackmun clerk, Michelle Alexander, has joined the faculty, having previously taught Civil Procedure and Civil Rights at Stanford Law School. The five former law clerks to Justice Harry Blackmun launched the Blackmun Lecture series with a speech by Judge Diane Wood of the Seventh Circuit. They have kept us in touch with insights from the recently released Blackmun papers through a series of workshops and panel discussions.

Please stop by when you are in Columbus and take in a lecture or workshop, or visit with students in Lou's Café (see www.moritzlaw.osu.edu/events/index.html). See the new Gateway apartments where 73 students now live at the corner of High Street and 11th Avenue. Please also consider how you might contribute, monetarily, as part of the college's new $30 million campaign or through volunteer efforts. Thank you for what you do to improve the experience of those who follow you at the college.

Neutrality Agreements and the Future of Union Organizing*

by James J. Brudney

Newton D. Baker-Baker and Hostetler Chair in Law

One labor law question that has interested me for years is why there is so little successful union organizing even though millions of American workers seem to want to form a union at their place of employment.

It is well known that unions have played a sharply diminished role in the U.S. economy since about 1970. During this same period, there has been a substantial growth of inequality in our labor market. Earnings for non-supervisory workers have been largely stagnant, employees work longer hours as their vacation and holiday time has declined, the gap between workers in the upper and lower tiers has widened, and earnings for the top 100 CEOs are now more than 1,200 times the average worker salary. It is not surprising, therefore, that recent polls from Business Week and other sources report 50 percent or more of nonunion workers saying they would like to form a union.

And yet the proportion of the workforce represented by unions has declined steadily for decades, falling to eight percent in the private sector this past year—its lowest ratio since the early 1930s. Many factors have contributed to the decline, including global economic pressures and conditions, powerful individualist norms within American culture, and a lack of sufficient energy and imagination on the part of the union movement. What has engaged my attention is the role played by our national system of labor-management regulation.

Federal labor law guarantees workers the right to band together for the purpose of bargaining collectively “through representatives of their own choosing.” This employee choice, including the right to refrain from joining a union, has long been analogized to decision making by voters in the political context. Starting in the late 1940s, elections supervised by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) have been regarded as the optimal means for promoting employee free choice under the law. One could argue that given the fundamental asymmetry of power between employers and unions, the NLRB elections model was flawed from the start. In the course of a representation election campaign, employers regularly convey to workers—through their speech and conduct—the risks associated with employees’ dependent status. Even if a union prevails on election day and is recognized as a bargaining representative, it holds neither legal nor economic authority over its constituency of workers; its relationship to employees is a relatively contingent one.

From a historical standpoint, perhaps the election model was more persuasive in the era following World War II, when analogies between industrial and political democracy reflected in part a societal impulse to celebrate recent national triumphs. Since 1970, however, the law regulating union election campaigns has developed to exacerbate many of the inherent inequalities between labor and management in the pre-recognition setting.

The law as interpreted permits employers to restrict employees’ speech with co-workers while forcing them to attend meetings at which well-prepared managers “predict” various dire consequences if their employees decide to form a union. Union organizers who might be expected to counter employers’ dire predictions, and to offer their own arguments, may be excluded from the worksite altogether in almost all circumstances. The stark inequality between employer “incumbents” and union “challengers” regarding rights of access to, or speech aimed at, the voters would be unthinkable in an ordinary partisan election setting.

Employers also have benefited from the law’s remarkably weak remedial structure, through their increased willingness to terminate or otherwise discipline union supporters during an election campaign. By 1990, there were incidents of unlawful termination in fully 25 percent of all organizing efforts, and a 1998 study estimated that one out of every 18 workers supporting a union organizing campaign was the object of unlawful discrimination. Moreover, employers since 1970 have come to rely heavily on hordes of “union avoidance” consultants and advisors to take greater advantage of what the law permits or does not sufficiently deter.

Given employers’ widespread lawful and unlawful resistance to unionization, it is hardly surprising that 40 percent of all nonunion, non-managerial employees believe their own employer would fire or otherwise mistreat them if they campaigned for a union. In addition, more than half of all employees who say they want to be represented by a union report that management resistance is the principal reason they do not have one.

Over the past decade, organized labor has begun a serious challenge to this state of affairs, by shifting its organizing efforts away from the NLRB elections process toward negotiating with employers on a regular basis for “neutrality agreements.”

Under these contractual arrangements, an employer agrees to remain neutral during a union’s subsequent organizing campaign, the union agrees not to be critical of management during its campaign, and both parties agree that the employees will decide whether they want the union to represent them based on procedures set forth within the neutrality agreement itself. Typically, the agreement calls for recognition to be accorded if a majority of employees sign valid union authorization cards (known as “card check” recognition) or if the employees vote for a union in an election supervised by a private third party rather than the NLRB.

Neutrality agreements now account for many if not most new members organized by a number of leading unions. They have been influential in adding new representation for workers employed in health care, hotel and restaurant service, telecommunications, the needle trades, and other sectors of the economy. While union organizing efforts have increased markedly in the past 10 years, the annual number of NLRB elections has declined to its lowest level since the 1940s. Of three million workers reported as newly organized by the AFL-CIO over six years from 1998 to 2003, less than one-fifth were added through the formerly pre-eminent NLRB elections process.

A recent influential study of 200 organizing campaigns featuring neutrality/card check agreements found that the campaigns ended with union recognition 78 percent of the time. This compares with recent NLRB election win rates for unions of about 40 percent in units that exceed 100 workers. Importantly, the study's authors report that the rate of achieving an initial collective bargaining agreement in successful neutrality campaigns approached 100 percent. That level far exceeds the roughly 60 percent success rate associated with first contracts following NLRB election victories by unions.

In light of these relative track records, it is not hard to understand why unions would prefer to organize through neutrality agreements. Such agreements enable unions to sidestep the intimidating consequences often associated with employers' anti-union speech and conduct and also to minimize what can be the eviscerating impact of lengthy litigation-related delay. By transforming union organizing campaigns from bitter and divisive contests into relatively civil and positive exchanges, neutrality and card check arrangements encourage more stable and peaceful labor relations.

Moritz Law Grad Finds Liberty in Philadelphia's NLRB

Jennifer Roddy Spector '97 says she never anticipated a career in law, but today the Moritz College of Law grad is a field attorney with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) in Philadelphia.

Both before and after law school, Spector worked in human resources. In fact, she held that position in the field while pursuing her legal education. She also earned her undergraduate degree from Ohio State, proving she truly bleeds scarlet and gray. That fact does not go unnoticed in her office, which she says is "full of Penn State grads." Husband Marc, whom she married in November 1997, is also an Ohio State alum. They became parents of their own little Buckeye, Jacob Nathaniel, in July 2005.

As a field attorney, Spector's primary responsibility is to investigate alleged violations of federal labor laws. If she uncovers malfeasance, she then prosecutes the case through administrative agencies and federal courts. Being licensed to practice law only in Ohio has not affected Spector's legal career at all. "The magic of federal employment is that an attorney just has to be licensed somewhere," she explains.

Spector says she attended law school with the idea she would practice in a traditional employment law setting. "Labor law wasn't even on the radar," she says. She credits Professor James J. Brudney with helping alter that plan. In 1999, two years after she graduated from law school, and three full years since she had originally applied to work there, the NLRB's Philadelphia office called Spector to see if she was still interested in a position. Despite being happy with her job in Columbus, she went for an interview.

Philadelphia was a city she and her husband had discussed moving to in the future, but after her interview, she was ambivalent about whether the time was right. "I called Professor Brudney to ask, 'Is this a job any right-thinking person would want?'" she recalls. "He was really helpful and told me it was a great place to work, a really well-managed agency, very humane in terms of work/life balance, and that I'd get trial experience right away. I was sold."

When Spector goes to court with a case, something she does two to three times a year, she likens the experience to "trial by ambush." She has no way of knowing what discovery or information opposing counsel will produce, so she must prepare herself as thoroughly as possible. Despite those challenges, Spector calls her job "democracy in action."

Spector says she enjoys working in labor relations because, "I love being directly involved in people's working lives." She now realizes that what she liked about working in human resources mirrors what she enjoys about working at the NLRB.

Another aspect of her job that pleases her is the variety. She enjoys the traditional challenges of lawyering, like interviewing witnesses, conducting discovery, and preparing for trials, as much as she likes what she calls "off-beat assignments," such as when she conducted an around-the-clock representation election for more than 1,200 employees at a cattle slaughterhouse and meatpacking plant during the summer of 2004. "You haven't lived until you've spent 12 hours in the rendering plant!" she says.

Another benefit of her post with the NLRB is the flexibility it affords. "One of the most attractive things about working for my agency is the opportunity for work/family balance; it really is a great place for working moms," says Spector. Her normal workweek is a true 40 hours, unless she is preparing for trial, then comp time is available for overtime work. Part-time work is even available should lawyers need to reduce their workload. In addition, work-at-home can either be regularly scheduled or made available for special projects.

However, now that she's a new mom, Spector is focusing her energy on labor of another sort—her baby's pressing needs and her "major fixer upper of a house" located near Bucks County.

Jennifer Spector '97

More intriguing is what motivates employers to negotiate neutrality and card check provisions that make it easier for their employees to become organized and pursue a collective bargaining relationship. Many employers refer to the costs imposed for not reaching such an agreement—economic losses associated with a work stoppage, handbilling that deters customers from patronizing their business, or the withholding of financial support or investment by a third party amenable to union influence.

Opponents of neutrality agreements often argue that if employees are unable to hear the employer's side of the story, they will not be equipped to make a suitably informed and reasoned choice.

Employers also have described a range of economic benefits they expect to realize. Some neutrality agreements offer an edge in attracting new business, by including union commitments to advocate that their members purchase the products or services the employers provide. Other agreements give rise to union-management partnerships that can effectively extract benefits from government—through joint efforts to pass or defeat legislation or to secure favorable regulatory results or judicial settlements. Employers also have determined in certain instances that neutrality agreements enhance their ability to attract qualified workers or to promote larger labor relations goals.

In short, employers' decisions to enter neutrality agreements—like their decisions to resist unions—are, at root, matters of business judgment. Firms are drawn to the contractual approach because—or to the extent that—it provides them with opportunities for enhanced employee productivity, leverage in improving market share, and assistance in dealing with the growing complexity of a regulated environment.

All this is not meant to suggest that the business community has welcomed neutrality agreements with open arms. Opponents of neutrality agreements often argue that if employees are unable to hear the employer's side of the story, they will not be equipped to make a suitably informed and reasoned choice. That contention, however, invites skepticism on two separate grounds.

One is that the employer already has both the opportunity and motive to present reasons in favor of individual—as opposed to collective—bargaining before the union ever makes an appearance and is likely to have done so over a period of months, if not years. A second is that the optimal time for informed choice about the merits of a particular union's ongoing presence will occur during contract negotiations—when employees must focus on precisely what a collectively bargained workplace would look like.

Apart from such informational concerns, supporters of secret ballot voting worry that too many individuals will sign cards either without giving the matter enough thought or from fear of being criticized by their fellow employees. It is not at all clear, however, that workers will operate from indifference or socially generated peer pressure. Assuming they do, a union seems unlikely to retain employees' allegiance while negotiating a contract with their employer unless it can persuade them that its bargaining priorities and demands deserve majority support and even a commitment to apply group pressure under the right circumstances.

The private contractual focus of neutrality agreements has sparked controversy in Congress, where legislation has been proposed to ban the new organizing technique. On the other hand, this new approach has generated support among an even larger group of legislators; a different bill is pending that would codify card check results as a coequal alternative to government-supervised elections. Given the challenges of securing filibuster-proof congressional support for labor relations bills in general, it seems likely that the law will remain unchanged for some time to come.

Meanwhile, the NLRB is reviewing different aspects of the neutrality agreement approach. Longstanding board and court precedent makes clear that such voluntary recognition practices are lawful on their face, but the substantial increase in their occurrence has raised new issues of application and enforcement. All in all, the legal and policy implications of neutrality agreements promise to be hot topics of debate in Washington and among scholars of labor law for the foreseeable future.

*This article summarizes a longer and more detailed presentation (featuring extensive footnotes and citations, as befits the law review genre) titled Neutrality Agreements and Card Check Recognition: Prospects for Changing Paradigms that appears in the Iowa Law Review, March 2005, vol. 90, pp. 819–886.

Labor and Employment Law at the Moritz College of Law

The law regulating workplace relationships is an area of special emphasis and expertise at Moritz Law. It is a subject that is impressively comprehensive in scope: from the standpoint of a typical individual engaged in the workforce, labor and employment law structures the entire life cycle. Beginning with child labor statutes and running through age discrimination and pension laws, the law addresses nearly every issue confronting employees during their working years—wages, hours, fringe benefits, safety and health, job security, discrimination, and employee privacy.

Moritz Law faculty who teach in the area of labor and employment law have national reputations for their writings on contemporary issues. These professors engage students in critical analysis of constitutional, statutory, and common law issues, while forcing them to confront complex and controversial public policy problems.

Moritz Law graduates in the field go on to represent unions, individual workers, private employers, federal and state government agencies, and public interest organizations active in this field.

Faculty

The labor and employment faculty at Moritz Law are experienced in the practice of law. With national reputations in the field, they use a wide range of innovative instructional methods and invest a substantial amount of their energies in the teaching process. The faculty who teach in this area are:

James J. Brudney, Newton D. Baker–Baker and Hostetler Chair in Law

Martha Chamallas, Robert J. Lynn Chair in Law

Sarah Rudolph Cole, Squire Sanders & Dempsey Designated Professor of Law

Ruth Colker, Heck Faust Memorial Chair in Constitutional Law

L. Camille Hébert, Carter C. Kissell Professor of Law

Joseph B. Stulberg, John W. Bricker Professor of Law

Charles E. Wilson, Associate Professor of Law

Core Courses

The three core courses, Labor Law, Employment Law, and Employment Discrimination Law, each deal with fundamental aspects of the law that helps govern the workplace.

Labor Law addresses the relationship between employers and workers who act collectively through a labor union. It explores federal statutory protections accorded to workers when they engage in concerted activity to improve or secure their terms and conditions of employment; it also examines the rights and responsibilities of employers in responding to these activities.

Employment Law covers state and federal regulation of terms and conditions of employment in a nonunion employment setting. It deals with issues that often arise at early stages of employment (such as information-gathering, drug testing, and regulation of expression on the job); issues involving termination of employment (including recent erosions of the employment-at-will doctrine, employee protections during mass layoffs or plant closings, and employers' ability to secure and enforce non-compete agreements); and issues involving safety and health as a condition of employment (notably worker's compensation and the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act).

Employment Discrimination Law covers the laws protecting employees from "status" discrimination—discrimination based on race, national origin, religion, gender, age, and sexual orientation. A focus is federal protections involving each of these areas, most prominently Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. It analyzes the complex frameworks of proof the courts have constructed to give meaning to the statutory ban on discrimination and harassment and also examines closely the procedures for litigating claims.

Advanced Courses

In addition to the core subjects, a tremendous range of advanced courses in the area of workplace law is offered. One notable example is the Law of Disability Discrimination, which allows students to work directly with government agencies to implement anti-discrimination guidelines and principles. Also offered are seminars on Sexual Harassment, Employee Privacy, Age Discrimination in the Workplace, and Comparative Labor and Employment Law (focusing on British, European, and South African law). Further, there are a number of clinical courses addressed to Negotiation and Arbitration that have a heavy workplace law emphasis. Finally, a variety of civil rights, business law, and jurisprudential courses include a substantial focus on employment-related issues or problems.

Charles C. Warner: Expert in Employment Law

When Charles C. Warner '70 attended the Moritz College of Law from 1967-70, he didn't take a single course about employment law. Considering his focus at the Columbus law firm of Porter, Wright, Morris & Arthur is on employment-related matters and litigation, that sounds astonishing.

So how can this maven of employment law claim to have learned virtually nothing he knows about the topic in law school?

"When I was in law school, there were no employment law classes," he stresses. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 went into effect in 1965 and law schools, he says, "had to catch up." He did, however, enjoy the only class the school offered in a related topic: labor law.

Ironically, Warner typifies a rare breed among professionals. Despite representing countless employers on various legal matters, he has worked for only one boss throughout his entire legal career. Following his graduation from Moritz Law, he went straight to work for Porter, Wright and was made a firm partner in 1975.

In addition to his busy legal career, Warner has also made a habit of serving in a variety of volunteer positions both within and outside the legal community. He was president of the Columbus Bar Association from 1991-92, after serving as an officer on its board of governors, and has been an active member of the Ohio State Bar Association. On the national scene, he was co-chair of the ABA's Equal Employment Opportunity committee from 2000-02.

This married father of three adult children does not limit his volunteerism to solely law-related organizations. Opera Columbus, Chamber Music Columbus, and the Yale Club of Central Ohio (he earned a B.A. from Yale in 1964) have all benefited from his leadership.

As a law student, Warner appreciated the ability to interact with his professors. "They were committed to engaging law students even outside of class," he recalls. And he calls the "access and interaction" with law school faculty a "huge positive."

Moritz Law professor emeritus Larry Herman left a sizable impression, says Warner. The two worked closely when Warner was on the National Moot Court Team (they won Best Brief in the national competition in New York that year). "What he taught me about thinking and making a point made a huge difference in my legal writing," says Warner.

Warner credits Earl Morris, one of the namesakes of the Porter, Wright law firm, as his most important professional influence. Morris, once president of the American Bar Association, was a "truly outstanding person to the core," he says. Morris "could make a janitor feel like a king."

Warner says the second best decision of his life was to become a lawyer and the third was to immerse himself in the practice of employment law. His best choice, he notes, was to marry wife Betsy in 1964.

Warner, who hails from Gambier, Ohio, met Betsy while the pair was attending college. Following their 1964 graduation, the newlyweds joined the Peace Corps and spent two years in Nigeria. While there, Warner says he often pondered what he would do with his life upon returning stateside. Despite not having any lawyers in his family, he decided to attend law school.

His years at law school taught him how to "focus, prioritize, and get the job done," he says. He had never experienced the Socratic method in any other educational setting and found the process "engaging. It pushed my creative juices."

Warner's contributions to both the civic and legal communities have earned him several accolades. In 1998, the Ohio Association of Civil Trial Attorneys honored him with the Frank S. Hurd Member of the Year award. He's also been recognized by the Columbus Bar Association with the Community Service Award and received Ohio State's Distinguished Service Medal.

Consistently listed in The Best Lawyers in America for his work in the labor and employment law areas, Warner is also noted in Who's Who in American Law.

Among the kudos, recognitions, and incredible respect he has earned throughout his distinguished career, Warner holds one memento as his most sacred. On his well-appointed desk on the 32nd floor of the Huntington Building in downtown Columbus, he glances at a photo of his family taken just after he was sworn in as president of the Columbus Bar Association in 1991. "It's my most important keepsake," he says.

The work of the Moritz Law faculty members has continued to garner public recognition. Their work reflects their dedication to providing professional and public service through scholarly publications and presentations at conferences, symposia, and professional meetings. Some of their recent activity is noted below.

Of Note

Michelle Alexander

Michelle Alexander has joined the Moritz Law faculty and accepted a half-time appointment with the Kirwan Institute for the Study of Race and Ethnicity. Professor Alexander taught at Stanford University Law School where she was associate professor and director of the Civil Rights Clinics. She is an Order of the Coif graduate of Stanford Law and served as an editor of the Stanford Law and Policy Review. She is the fifth Moritz Law faculty member who is a former law clerk for the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun. She also clerked for U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Judge Abner Mikva.

Deborah Jones Merritt has returned to the Moritz Law faculty full time. Since 2000, she has served as the director of the John Glenn Institute for Public Service and Public Policy at Ohio State and was on leave from the law faculty. She was the first permanent director of the institute and, with her colleagues there, built outstanding programs in citizenship, training, and research. The Ohio State community has recognized her as a Distinguished Lecturer, Distinguished Scholar, and as a recipient of the Distinguished Diversity Enhancement award. She holds the John Deaver Drinko/Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law and is an adjunct professor in the School of Public Policy and Management and in the Department of Sociology, and an associate faculty member in the Department of Women's Studies. This year at Moritz Law, she is teaching Evidence, Legal Writing and Analysis, and a seminar in law and psychology.

On Sabbatical

Michael Braunstein

Michael Braunstein is on sabbatical for the 2005-2006 academic year. During the year, he plans to continue his scholarly work in the area of real estate finance and the law of eminent domain by completing a one-volume treatise, Ohio Law of Eminent Domain and Regulatory Takings, which will be published by Matthew Bender and Co.

Sarah R. Cole will be on sabbatical for the spring 2006 semester. She plans to use her leave to revise her treatise on mediation by incorporating an analysis of the implications of states' consideration or adoption of the Uniform Mediation Act.

Peter Swire is on sabbatical for the fall 2005 semester, pursuing his scholarly interests in privacy and cyberlaw.

Vincene Verdun will be on sabbatical for the spring 2006 semester. She will use the professional leave to undertake a comparative law research project that explores and contrasts the experiences of blacks in America during Reconstruction and those of South African blacks following the end of apartheid.

Charles E. Wilson is on sabbatical for the 2005-2006 school year. He expects to work on a series of law journal articles assessing judicial responses to motions to dismiss for counsel failures to satisfy deadlines; the effect of gender on aspiration, bargaining behavior and outcomes in negotiations; and the effect of winner-take-all or compromise shadows on settlement rates, bargaining behavior, and negotiation outcomes.

Lombardi Named to Head Career Services Office

Pamela H. Lombardi, who has served as assistant dean of Alumni Relations at Moritz Law for the last 10 years, has been named to the position of assistant dean for Career Services. The move marks her return to the area of career planning. She served as placement director at the college from 1990 to 1995 and as director of career planning at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law from 1983 to 1990.

“My 12 years in career services at Ohio State and Cleveland-Marshall College of Law were particularly rewarding,” says Lombardi. “My experience is that the best law is practiced by lawyers in jobs that fit their personal skill set. The excitement that comes from helping students find such jobs is professionally very rewarding.”

“In addition to experience in career services, Pam brings a wealth of alumni contacts to the position,” says Moritz Law dean Nancy H. Rogers. “She is enthusiastic about returning to a position that involves greater student contact and the opportunity to work with the Career Services staff.”

Dean Rogers notes that Lombardi has been outstanding in her alumni relations role: “We both thank her for her contributions and will miss her there, where she has been creative, dedicated, strategic, and personable.”

Lombardi began her career in the human resources office at the Ford

Pamela H. Lombardi

Motor Company, where she frequently hired lawyers to work in the labor relations department. The experience led her to the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, where she blended it into a new career. While directing the Cleveland-Marshall career planning program, she earned a master's degree in human resource development at Cleveland State University, served two terms as the president of the Cleveland Law Placement Association, and participated in the National Association for Law Placement at the local and national levels.

When Lombardi joined Ohio State in 1990, she brought knowledge of the Cleveland job market and introduced the Columbus Bar Association to the practice interview program she helped start in Cleveland. “The students at Ohio State were great,” says Lombardi. “I met with them periodically to solicit their suggestions about how the office might improve. They had great ideas, and we were able to implement many of them.”

In 1995, Lombardi was promoted to assistant dean for Alumni Relations. She regularized annual alumni events in Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toledo, and Washington, D.C., and participated in the design of the college's award-winning alumni web page. She was the recipient of a university award in 2002 for innovative programming in support of placement activities. She also worked with the team responsible for design of the newly opened Barrister Club.

Lombardi wants to make the office of Career Services more proactive so students utilize fully the services of the talented staff. “We want to help students focus on what they want and then provide them with the skills and specific job referrals they need to be successful,” she stresses. She also hopes to put her contacts with alumni to work for students. “Our alumni are particularly loyal and many have already offered to help current students,” she adds. “Our job in career services is to marshal those resources in the most productive way.”

Laura Landy Carr has been named the director of Alumni Relations. Carr has served as the events coordinator in the alumni office since 2001. She may be contacted at (614) 292-2937 or via e-mail at carr.275@osu.edu.

Honor Roll of Donors

The annual Honor Roll of Donors to the Moritz College of Law reflects all cash gifts received in the college during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 2004, and ending June 30, 2005. This report does not include gifts made directly to the academic or student programs. Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of this report. If you find an error or omission, please contact the Office of Development, Moritz College of Law, 55 West 12th Avenue, Columbus, OH 43210, (614) 688-8232.

Stuhldreher Establishes Awards for Journal Students

Page Hall was a formative place for George Stuhldreher '51. It was not only the location of the law school during his time at Ohio State, but, like it was for so many alumni, it was a second home. Stuhldreher served as editor of the Ohio State Law Journal, spending a considerable amount of time under the lights at his desk. George recalls many Saturday afternoons when his work would be interrupted, just briefly, by a loud roar erupting from Ohio Stadium.

George, now a retired partner with the Cleveland firm Gallagher Sharp, received the Ezra Topper Award while serving as the editor of the law journal. It was a small financial award at the time, but its impact will be felt by generations of journal students to come. George remembered how special it was to receive that award recently as he and his wife, Norah, discussed ways to give back to his alma mater. That memory prompted the Stuhldreheres to create endowments at Moritz Law to provide two awards annually to students who follow in his footsteps. One award will be given to a student working on the Ohio State Law Journal and another will be given to a student working on the Ohio State Journal on Alternative Dispute Resolution.

During a fall trip to Columbus for a football game, the Stuhldreheres toured the current journal offices in Drinko Hall. Gone is the two-foot by four-foot desk from which the law journal staff produced their work. In its place now stands a fully functional office suite with computers, printers, and a secret entrance to the law library. But there remains one similarity: students' work continues to be disrupted on Saturday afternoons in the fall by a distant roar from Ohio Stadium. It is that dedication that George and Norah Stuhldreher wish to reward.

Investing in Momentum: the Campaign for Moritz Law

October 14 was not a typical Friday at the Moritz College of Law. In addition to the students milling about and the professors rushing to and from their offices, there was Brutus Buckeye, the Ohio State cheerleaders, a jazz band, pompoms, popcorn, hot dogs, and hundreds of the college's nearest and dearest friends. It was the day Moritz Law announced the Investing in Momentum campaign—a drive to raise $30 million to recruit and retain world-class faculty members, enhance scholarship offerings for students, support and foster professionalism, and expand innovative and unique programming.

Dean Nancy H. Rogers and campaign chair Ed Cooperman '67 rang in this exciting period in the history of the college with a pep-rally celebration that exemplified the feeling of momentum and enthusiasm permeating the classrooms of Drinko Hall.

Ohio State Alumni Association president Archie Griffin gave a keynote address, telling the buzzing crowd that, through determination and dedication, excellence can be achieved. The two-time Heisman trophy winner went on to challenge the alumni and friends of the college in the same way Coach Woody Hays challenged him to “pay it forward.” This message of continued commitment and giving back rang true to the crowd who gathered to celebrate the future of Moritz Law.

While October 14 was a day of fun and excitement, the real joy will come when the priorities of the campaign are realized. The campaign will address not only the current needs of the college, but will continue to build a foundation of support for generations to come. “With this campaign, we’ll trigger the imagination...we’ll enhance our strengths and dedicate our resources to excellence,” Cooperman said.

The $30 million goal for the Investing in Momentum campaign is equal to the gift from Michael E. Moritz in 2001. Upon successful completion of the campaign, Moritz Law will have all the resources necessary to become a law school second to none.

Henry Folsom Page Society

Founded during the Law Centennial Campaign, the Henry Folsom Page Society recognizes the college's most generous and loyal donors who make major gifts of $25,000 or more during a five-year period or a deferred gift of $100,000 or more. Robert J. Watkins '53, Cincinnati, has served as honorary president of the society. For more information about becoming a Page Society member, contact the development office at (614) 688-8232.

Moritz Law Milestone: Five Journals, Five Female Editors

The Moritz College of Law marks a milestone this year. Not only is it the first time there are five scholarly journals, but also each publication is led by a woman. The students at the helm of these journals have displayed strong leadership abilities and a passion for their respective publications.

The Ohio State Law Journal editor-in-chief, Leslie Siegel, came to Ohio State with a master's degree in journalism and experience as a working journalist. Now, she heads a staff of 90 students, about which she says, "It's been an amazing experience to work with such a motivated, talented managing board and staff."

Siegel enjoys the wide range of legal topics covered in the journal's articles. "We are able to write our student notes about almost any conceivable legal topic with the opportunity to have them published," says the Columbus native.

The Journal on Dispute Resolution's editor-in-chief, Amber Lea Gosnell, of Columbus, became interested in working with that journal because "JDR publishes articles that not only reflect changes in the legal field, but often predict what is to come. That is exciting work!" She manages a staff of 62 individuals and wants to maintain JDR's status as the number one dispute resolution journal in the country through impressive articles, thoughtful symposia, and a hard-working staff.

Jennifer Dutcher, of Lewis Center, the editor-in-chief of the Ohio State Journal of Criminal Law, says that, "OSJCL offers the unequalled opportunity to work with nationally recognized scholars in the field of criminal law." Jennifer likes the format of the journal, which is structured differently from exclusively student-run journals. "In each issue," she notes, "we have a symposium section, a commentary section that includes shorter, less formal essays, and a review section reflecting on books, movies, studies, and reports."

Gina A. Lee, editor-in-chief of I/S: Journal of Law and Policy for the Information Society, selected I/S because of its unique blend of involvement by both Moritz Law and Carnegie Mellon University. As such, Gina hopes to make I/S the source of high-quality discourse on issues in which technology and the law converge. Also a former working journalist, she felt I/S provided an ideal opportunity to incorporate her liberal arts background into the study of law because of the journal's interdisciplinary nature. It also was an optimal arena for the publication of her note, which delved into cutting-edge issues that dominate the area of First Amendment and privacy law—another nod to the Pittsford, New York, native's journalism experience.

Miranda J. Fields, editor-in-chief of the newest Moritz Law journal, the Entrepreneurial Business Law Journal, was also a co-chair on its founding committee. "I'm very excited about the Moritz Law administration's willingness to create programs and academic opportunities in business law in response to student interest," says the Columbus native. Much of her work this year has been focused on getting the journal up and running—creating the first two issues and planning a symposium to be held March 17.

Leslie speaks for all five editors when she describes the experience of working on a journal. "It requires a lot of hard work and a significant commitment for everyone involved," she says. "I hope to make the experience as rewarding and as much fun as possible for all our members."

Benjamin Hill Receives Fulbright Scholarship

Benjamin Hill, a third-year student at Moritz Law, has received a Fulbright Scholarship to research gang laws in Honduras. He is taking a one-year break from his law studies to work with the Association for Active Citizenship, a non-governmental Honduras organization that conducts seminars and town hall-type discussions. Benjamin will use these town meetings to determine the effects that anti-gang legislation has had on Honduran communities. Additionally, he will work with politicians, law enforcement officers, lawyers, and judges to get their perspectives on the issue.

Benjamin Hill

A graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University, Benjamin has focused his studies at Moritz Law on criminal and international law. In Honduras, he will be taking classes with Honduran law students to learn more about their criminal justice system. He hopes to learn more about ways to approach problems that have international repercussions and how developing countries work toward more complete democracies. Once he receives his law degree, Benjamin plans to pursue a career in international law and international dispute resolution.

Cronmiller Receives University Multicultural Award

Cherish Cronmiller

Cherish Cronmiller '06 has received Ohio State's Graduate/Professional Student Award from the university's Multicultural Center. The award is presented to students who have, in addition to work and academic scholarship, made an impact on the university community through advocacy, enthusiasm, and dedication.

The Multicultural Center provides intellectual and cultural enrichment programs and services to foster a community environment that recognizes cultural differences, respects cultural uniqueness, and facilitates cross-cultural interaction, learning, and appreciation.

Students Tour Central Intelligence Agency

Students who participated in the Moritz Law summer program in Washington, D.C., were treated to a tour of the headquarters of the Central Intelligence Agency. Taking the tour were the 22 students who were in the program, along with other Ohio State students working in D.C. during the summer. The tour featured a session with the CIA's liaison to Hollywood, Chase Brandon, who explained his job of working with the media to have more accurate (yet entertaining) depictions of the agency's mission. The group also met with two senior lawyers from the agency, including one who has led the legal aspects of counter-terrorism since 2001. Students in the summer program this year took "The Ethics from Washington Lawyering" as well as an externship seminar that accompanied the externships secured through the program. Professor Peter Swire directs the Washington program.

Moritz Law Leadership, Dean's Special Awards Presented

Michael Spencer

Azadeh Matinpour

Lori Turner

Miranda Fields

Several students were honored by Moritz Law over the summer. The Michael E. Moritz Leadership Award—presented to one law student each in the first-, second-, and third-year classes for demonstrating leadership outside the classroom by involvement in university and college activities, student programs, and events—was given to Miranda Fields '06 and Azadeh Matinpour '07. The Dean's Special Award, given to a student to honor outstanding leadership and contributions to the college, went to Lori Turner '06 and Michael Spencer '06.

Awards were presented to members of the Class of 2005 during the May 13 Hooding Ceremony. Sarah Lynn Stanton received the Moritz Law Leadership Award. Brandon James Lester and Kara Jean Marshall received the Harry S. and Georgina Lett Memorial Award, presented to students who demonstrate outstanding service to the college. The John J. Adams Memorial Award was given to Alejandro Vicente Cortes and Chad Keetch. This award was established by the Class of 1916 in memory of John J. Adams, former dean of the college, and awarded to students for leadership in and significant contributions through law-related activities.

New Mentoring and More @ Moritz Program Provides Glimpse of the Future for Current Students

Mentoring relationships are valuable at all phases of a career, according to Ida Abbott, a national consultant on mentoring. Abbott's workshop on August 25 for Moritz Law students served as an informative springboard for the new Mentoring and More @ Moritz program.

Abbott said that successful people realize that they need multiple mentors for various needs over time. While some mentoring relationships are long-term, other valuable mentoring interactions may last for a relatively short period of time. Recognizing that many people can provide useful wisdom is a key, and students should use the opportunities presented through the Mentoring and More @ Moritz program to broaden their perspectives on the legal profession and how they fit into it.

Participants in the program are placed in small groups of three to five people, and each group is assigned two mentors. These small groups of lawyers and students will engage in debate and discussions following luncheon presentations on various provocative issues related to professionalism and the practice of law. Speakers for these luncheon gatherings will include judicial leaders, lawmakers, and experts in various legal areas from across the country.

The workshop was followed by a reception with 100 volunteer lawyers who will serve as mentors. The reception was held in the new Barrister Club, a privately financed facility built to accommodate the luncheons that will form the basis of the new mentoring program, as well as other college programs.

Abbott, who consults with law firms and bar associations throughout the country, praised Moritz Law leaders for developing its mentoring program and investing valuable resources into the structure and success of the program. She said that the Mentoring and More @ Moritz program is unique because of the opportunity it provides students to learn about mentoring strategies while still in law school. The program is poised to enhance students' commitment to the high ideals of professionalism embraced by the legal community.

Students and mentors get acquainted at the Mentoring and More @ Moritz reception held at the Barrister Club.

Ida Abbott, principal of Ida Abbott Consulting, was the guest speaker at the Mentoring and More @ Moritz workshop in August.

The conference room at the Barrister Club provides a perfect spot for getting to know each other.

Barrister Club Opens with Special Events

The Moritz College of Law celebrated the opening of the Barrister Club this fall with a series of special events. First to use the club were the Moritz Law faculty and staff, who kicked off the school year with a Sunday afternoon reception prior to the first week of classes. It was the first of several events to mark the beginning of a new era at the college, including three featured events—the first Mentoring and More @ Moritz luncheon on September 23, the grand opening events on September 30, and the kick-off of the capital campaign on October 14—as well as several pre-football game tailgates.

Owned by Moritz Law and operated by Ohio State's Faculty Club, the dining/conference facility was built specifically to foster interaction between students, faculty, alumni, and others in the legal community. The $2.2 million facility was funded by private donations; no tuition dollars were used in its construction or outfitting. Frank Bazler '54 and Alec Wightman '75 led the campaign to raise the funds for the club, which included a generous leadership gift provided by John D. Drinko '44.

The club is located at 25 West 11th Avenue, just south of the law school at the corner of 11th and High Street.

Joe Koncelik '93 Appointed Ohio EPA Director

It may seem an ideal fit now, but Joseph Koncelik '93 didn't always envision a career in environmental law, let alone envision himself overseeing the massive state agency charged with protecting the state's air, land, and water resources. But his January 2005 appointment by Governor Bob Taft to head the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency clearly reflects someone who has found his stride.

Joe is energized by the mix of science, law, and politics woven into his new job. As is often the case, the most exciting aspects of the job are also the most challenging. He thrives on the tremendous variety—the opportunity to practice law and work with the legislature and business community—but he must ensure that the agency strikes the appropriate balance between business and environment in a way that protects the state's natural resources while allowing business to thrive. Criticism comes from all directions: environmentalists accuse the agency of not doing enough, while some businesses blame the EPA for what they consider costly, stifling overregulation.

Joe takes it in stride. "Ohio EPA's mission is to protect Ohio's environment and the health of our citizens, which means holding businesses accountable for their environmental impact. But I believe it is possible to protect the environment and have a strong economy at the same time. It's a challenge, but that's one of the things that appeals to me about this job."

A member of the agency's senior management team for six years, Joe knows well the challenges of overseeing the agency's nearly 1300 employees and $165 million budget. His demonstrated ability to streamline operations and increase efficiency keeps the agency effective and viable during lean economic times. His first steps as director involved clearly defining and communicating focus areas such as restoring the Great Lakes, safeguarding wetlands, improving air quality, and helping small businesses comply with state regulations.

Upon graduation from Moritz Law, Joe explored different areas of law as an associate with a small, general practice firm in Lorain, Ohio. He wasn't sure whether a legal career was the right choice until two years later when he returned to Columbus and joined the Environmental Enforcement Section of the Ohio Attorney General's Office. It was his first foray into environmental law, and he quickly discovered his affinity for environmental law as well as his knack for public policy administration. Four years later, he joined the Ohio EPA as director of legal affairs.

Joe offers sound advice for law students who are unsure about their career paths: "Don't give up on it early; don't be afraid to try something totally different before saying, 'I don't want to be a lawyer.'"

Pro Bono Practice Earns Briley '69 Community Service Award

The angel carving atop Mike Briley's mantle is the gift of a boy who learned to whittle from his adoptive uncle. Arriving nearly a year after the adoption handled by Mike, the enclosed note said simply, "You are my angel." It serves as silent testimony to the lives Mike has changed through his pro bono practice. Mike was honored with the Moritz College of Law's Community Service Award at the orientation reception for new students on Friday, August 19, in the college's new Barrister Club.

The pro bono practice that earned this Toledo attorney the award began when a friend wanted to adopt a child. A problem solver at heart, Mike offered to handle it. A specialist in litigation and antitrust and trade regulation with Shumaker, Loop & Kendrick, LLP, Mike had to master a completely new area of law. "The work was so satisfying and joyous, I wanted to do it again," says Mike, and so he has for many years through the Toledo Bar Association Pro Bono Legal Service Program.

Most of Mike's pro bono cases are cross-family adoptions. Many are stepfathers adopting their wife's children when the natural dad is out of the picture or unwilling to pay support. Others are the children of institutionalized, drug-disabled mothers who are taken in by relatives or friends. In some cases, a loving family without the resources to pay for legal services wants to adopt. "Those are the most rewarding cases," says Mike who usually handles one or two adoption cases at any given time.

Adoption can be particularly difficult for low-income clients given costly home study fees and court costs. Pat Intagliata, Toledo Bar Pro Bono Program director, says Mike has been a particularly effective advocate in getting court costs waived for his clients.

Mike's clients sometimes have an ongoing relationship with him. When prior clients want to know something, such as whether to buy life insurance when purchasing a car, they turn to him. "These are very proud people," says Mike. "Anyone who expects accolades from pro bono clients will be disappointed.

Mike Briley '69 receives the Community Service Award from Dean Nancy H. Rogers. The award, given by the Moritz Law Alumni Society, was presented to Briley on August 19 at a reception for new students in the college's new Barrister Club.

These clients don't always have the same social framework—many were never taught to say 'thank you.' The satisfaction has to come from the work."

Mike doesn't proselytize. What he looks for are attorneys who already have an interest in helping others. He understands that young lawyers are always trying to balance their lives and can't jeopardize their careers by doing too much pro bono work. They often have commitments to young families. "Don't try to do it all when you're 30 years old," Mike cautions. "Start small with something you are truly interested in intellectually and emotionally. Limit it to one thing. As you get older, you will eventually have more time to devote to it. Don't put it off either; that's a mistake too. Start realistically, but start."

As Mike's pro bono practice grew, he talked with psychologists who emphasized the value of adoption in creating solid family foundations for children. Mike and his wife, Sandy, a second-grade teacher, share that value. They have a son and a daughter whose accomplishments speak to the family support they received. Their son is an astrophysicist with a dual Ph.D. in astronomy and physics. He is a professor at the University of Wisconsin and a director of the National Science Foundation. Their daughter, who earned her Ph.D. in biochemistry, is doing postdoctoral research in cardiology at Mt. Sinai Hospital in New York. She holds three medical patents for contrast agents and hopes eventually to teach and do research at the college level.

Mike's community service extends beyond adoption. Early in his practice, he was chair of the OSBA's Anti-trust Board of Governors. He was also actively involved in the ABA's section on anti-trust. Mike spent a lot of time researching and organizing materials for related public speaking engagements. It was a small next step to publish his presentations. He has coauthored a book and has had his work published in three law reviews and a host of bar, trade, and conference publications.

Mike chose a career in law so he could help people and through that process has consistently demonstrated the highest ideals of the profession. The 2005-2006 Moritz Law Community Service Award properly recognizes his service to clients, students, and the profession. Award nominator, Mark D. Wagoner '97, sums it up: "Mike is an outstanding lawyer, a good mentor, and an example for other lawyers to recognize the need for pro bono legal advice." Professionally, what more is there?

Storm Troopers: John Okuley '03 and Paul Gallegos '03 Make Relief Trip to Hurricane-Ravaged South

From the comfort of their central Ohio homes, Moritz Law alumni John Okuley '03 and Paul Gallegos '03 watched helplessly as Hurricane Katrina and the flooding that followed devastated the U.S. Gulf Coast on August 29, 2005. Almost impulsively and in an act of what their wives called "great faith and desperation," the two decided to drive 13 hours to Mississippi to help relief efforts.

The 1,600-mile journey started at a local Wal-Mart store, where they purchased 1,500 pounds of food and other supplies with out-of-pocket funds. They loaded the supplies into John's trailer and headed south. Not sure what to expect, they also packed tents, sleeping bags, water, and fuel for their trip home.

The duo traveled as far as they could, reaching Hattiesburg, Mississippi, on Saturday, September 3, five days after the hurricane made landfall. The residents outside of Hattiesburg, only 70 miles from the Gulf Coast, had not seen food in days, had no fuel, and had only marginal use of electricity, according to John.

John Okuley '03

Paul Gallegos '03

Once in Hattiesburg, the two linked up with the Florida chapter of the Southern Baptist Convention Disaster Relief at a local Baptist church where the group had established a base of operations. At the time, this was the only disaster relief organization they could find in the area, says John. They distributed the provisions they had brought from Ohio to New Augusta and Beaumont, Mississippi, in neighboring Perry County. The Baptist volunteers then asked them to help hand out donated supplies, including canned goods, baby formula, and diapers. The local sheriff guided them in distributing crucial supplies, including delivering provisions to the crossroads community of Hintonville and to the McSwain settlement, an isolated community of about 20 homes, before returning home to Columbus.

In the meantime, John's wife, Gina Langen, director of communications at Ohio State's College of Engineering, had sent an e-mail to friends seeking donations and received an almost immediate response. With those funds, 4,000 pounds of additional material was purchased and Gina and three others traveled to Mississippi to deliver the merchandise. As a result, Gina and John are forming a charitable organization to continue efforts to aid those affected by the storm.

In the days following the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, John was in contact with officials in Perry County, Mississippi, and surrounding counties to determine whether additional help was needed; he was ready to make the trip again, if necessary. However, larger, more organized groups of relief workers were arriving by then and the short-run emergency was abating.

Would he do it again? "Of course," he says. "Sometimes it's easy to see that something needs done, and you have the means to go ahead and do it." John is an associate at Mueller and Smith in Columbus.

Correction

The 1968 moot court picture featured on the back cover of the spring 2005 Law Record incorrectly identified Charles C. Callahan as Charles C. "Calhoon." According to Warren W. Ruggles '65, "'Charlie,' as the students referred to him among themselves, had a sharp mind and a knack to explain legal concepts very clearly. He taught property law and occasionally insurance and evidence." Numerous graduates called or wrote with the correction. We regret the error.
